Startup Accelerator vs. Incubator: Key Differences Explained

If you're a founder looking to grow your business, understanding the difference between accelerators and incubators can help you choose the right path forward.

ACCELERATOR

VS.

INCUBATOR

Short-term, intensive programs (usually 3–6 months)

DURATION

Long-term support with flexible timelines (months to years)

Equity investment is common

FUNDING

Equity investment is less common, focus is on support

Structured curriculum, mentorship, and defined milestones

PROGRAM STRUCTURE

Open-ended resources and flexible mentorship

Designed for startups ready to scale quickly

FOCUS

Supports early-stage ideas and development

Often culminates in a demo day to attract investors

OUTCOME

Focuses on building a strong foundation and long-term growth

Which is right for you?

Choose an accelerator if you're ready to scale fast and want structured guidance with access to investors. Choose an incubator if you're in the early stages and need flexible support to build and refine your idea.

Georgia manufacturer Cooper Machine builds family legacy with UGA SBDC support

For nearly 60 years, Cooper Machine Company has designed and built high-quality sawmill, pallet, and cooperage equipment for customers across the U.S. and abroad. Based in Wadley, Georgia, the third-generation family business got its start in 1965, when founder Billy Cooper developed the innovative Overhead End Dogging Scragg — a product that remains a company hallmark.

Today, CEO Frances Cooper carries on the family legacy, mentored by her father, Robert, and supported by her team. But like many manufacturers, Cooper Machine has faced challenges finding and hiring the skilled labor needed to grow.
