Strategic support from UGA SBDC helps Milledgeville digital marketing agency grow

When Nick and Lauren Goebel launched Goebel Media, they had a clear vision but little business experience. They knew how to craft compelling digital marketing campaigns—offering web design, social media management and graphic design—but navigating the complexities of hiring, financial planning and long-term growth was a different challenge. That’s when they turned to the University of Georgia Small Business Development Center (UGA SBDC) for support.

Fourteen years later, with guidance from the UGA SBDC, the Goebels have transformed their small operation into a thriving agency serving clients across Georgia and beyond. Their revenue has grown, they’ve expanded their team, and opened a new office in Decatur in 2024.

Back in 2010, however, the future of Goebel Media was far from certain. Operating out of a coworking space in Milledgeville, Nick and Lauren Goebel had just hired their first part-time employee when they realized they needed outside expertise to sustain and scale their business. They connected with Lisa Rackley, area director of the UGA SBDC in Macon, for help.

“Working in marketing, we felt like we had that aspect of the business figured out,” said Lauren Goebel. “It was the operations and admin piece—hiring, firing, HR—that we needed help with. We had never really been in a position where we were managing a team before.”
