Georgia manufacturing company expands globally with support from the UGA SBDC

FTG has carved out a global reputation for the engineering and manufacturing of innovative environmental solutions. Specializing in technologies that manage water removal and protect coastlines, FTG designs, manufactures and implements geosynthetic products used by industries ranging from wastewater treatment to habitat restoration to stabilize terrain. Their solutions, which span from local projects to large-scale international operations, are the result of decades of technical expertise and innovation.

Founded in 1995 by Smallwood, a civil engineer and former U.S. Army Corps of Engineers officer, and his brother Joe, Flint Industries originally focused on sludge capping. In 2004, the company pivoted into dewatering solutions using geotextile tubes, and by 2007 had added coastal tubes to its offerings. When Flint Industries was acquired and merged with its international sister company, FTG Group, in 2020, the newly unified Flint Technical Geosolutions began executing multimillion-dollar projects across the globe.

Smallwood knew that to grow the company's impact, he would need support. That's when he turned to the UGA SBDC and its International Trade Center.

"The company was very successful domestically. They had inquiries from overseas but needed assistance with quotations, financing, the entire export process," said Kloussiadis. "We developed a tailored training program specifically for FTG."
