Atlanta tech firm scales AI innovation with strategic support from UGA SBDC

David Hailey founded CountiFi in 2021 with a bold idea: to use artificial intelligence and computer vision to solve a longstanding problem in the airline industry—inventory waste.

Backed by years of experience working as an auditor for Ernst & Young and Delta Air Lines, Hailey recognized inefficiencies in how airlines tracked and managed their onboard food and beverage supplies.

Today, CountiFi helps major carriers around the globe understand exactly what inventory goes on and comes off their aircraft. By automating this process with AI-powered photo recognition tools, the company enables airlines to reduce waste, lower costs and make smarter decisions about what to stock. But despite the strength of their product, Hailey faced early challenges growing the business and communicating its value to investors and customers.

That's when guidance from the University of Georgia Small Business Development Center (UGA SBDC) became crucial.

"We took a multi-pronged approach to revamping CountiFi's fundraising efforts," said Strong. "We focused on aligning their story with what investors care about most—value proposition, traction and growth potential."

BULLARD COMMUNITY CHAMPIONS SPOTLIGHT

Amelia Claire Anderson

The Hawthorn Project
The Alliance for Dade

Amelia launched The Hawthorn Project, a scholarship and mentorship initiative designed to expand post-high school educational opportunities for students in Dade County. Through personalized guidance and strong community support, the project is helping students envision and pursue brighter futures.

The program began with a kickoff dinner attended by 20 local leaders – including county executives and small business owners – a powerful show of support for Dade County's next generation.

With its first scholarship set to be awarded in Fall 2026, The Hawthorn Project is built for lasting impact, thanks to the commitment of its dedicated community partners.

WHAT IS IT?

It's a free support program created to improve post-high school educational opportunities for Dade County students. It focuses on one-on-one mentorship with a trusted adult to help the student continue their education after graduation.
