Main Street is more optimistic this year even as inflation persists, survey says

PUBLISHED THU, FEB 1 2024

By: Kate Rogers

Small business owners are more optimistic to start the year, even as they face persistent inflation and lending concerns, a new poll released Thursday found.

Seventy-five percent of small business owners are optimistic about their financial trajectory in 2024, up from 68% a year earlier, according to a survey by Goldman Sachs 10,000 Small Business Voices, a policy advocate for small business owners.

Meanwhile, 28% of respondents rated the economy as good or excellent, up 9% from a quarter ago.

More than half of small business owners surveyed said they expect to create jobs this year, and 62% reported they anticipate profits will increase.

The survey adds to a recent string of data showing consumers and businesses have started to grow more confident about the economy after a stretch where inflation was stubborn and borrowing became tougher.

“The fact that 75% of small business owners are optimistic is a remarkably high number, considering inflation continues to plague them, they continue to face access to capital challenges and workforce-related issues ... all of those challenges have been very sticky for the last few years with no real progress,” Joe Wall, managing director of government affairs at Goldman Sachs, told CNBC.

The survey was conducted nationally in mid-January among more than 1,400 small business owners.

International Trade Assistance Opens New Markets for Surgical Garment Manufacturer

RAINEY APPAREL MANUFACTURING

The University of Georgia Small Business Development Center (UGA SBDC) offers a variety of ways to help small businesses grow. But what if a business wants to enter international markets? That's when the UGA SBDC utilizes its export training program, ExportGA.

Russell Rainey, owner of Rainey Apparel Manufacturing in Clarkston, was ready to sell his product globally but didn't know where to start. When he heard the UGA SBDC had resources that could help, he turned to them for advice and training.

Rainey, an inventor and entrepreneur, began designing and producing surgical compressing garments in 1998 after a friend, Atlanta dermatologist Dr. Edmund Griffin, described the type of compression wear his patients needed for healing. As liposuction and plastic surgery procedures advanced, so did Rainey's products. While domestic sales grew, the demand for his product was growing internationally as well. But he wasn't sure how best to enter those markets.

"When you own a business and are trying to take it higher, you often hit a glass ceiling," said Rainey. "After running my business nearly 25 years, I was hitting that ceiling and trying to understand how to expand and grow my business internationally."

"As a business owner I think that one of the biggest struggles for entrepreneurs is that you feel like you are on an island. But with the UGA Small Business Development Center, you have support in all areas of your business."

Russell Rainey, CEO and Founder, Rainey Apparel Manufacturing

Durham Mines Fossil Search

March 16 10:00 AM - 12:30 PM

Take a trip back in time to the swamps of the Carboniferous Period at the Durham Mines area of the Lula Lake Land Trust. There you'll search for the fossils of ferns, club-mosses, and other primitive plants from long ago.

Naturalists from the park will be on hand to tell you about the geology and history of the area and to assist you in finding fossils.

Bring a rock hammer if you have one; there will also be a few on hand to use if you don't. Wear sturdy shoes, and bring a pack, water, and snacks. Meet at the LLLT parking area on Durham Rd. (half-way between Highways 189 and 157). It is a one mile hike back to the dig site.

There is a ten person limit for this program. Reserve your place by calling 706-657-4050. There is a $5.00 charge for this program, plus a $5.00 fee to park at the LLLT site.

Cloudland Canyon State Park
