From Fitness Trainer to Keto-Friendly Baker: UGA SBDC Helps Scale Small Business

SINLESS SWEETS

Amber Connor was baking keto-friendly sweets out of her house, and she was ready to expand her business, Sinless Sweets. She connected with Rick McMurtrey, area director at the University of Georgia Small Business Development Center (UGA SBDC) in Augusta, to learn the best way to scale her business. McMurtrey helped her review potential retail locations, evaluate build-out costs, prepare financial projections and organize the financials and management of the business. Since working with the UGA SBDC, Sinless Sweets has moved to a brick-and-mortar location, experienced a 300% increase in sales and added six employees.

Connor, an avid fitness and nutrition enthusiast, was working as a personal trainer in a gym when the pandemic hit. The gym temporarily closed, and Connor needed to channel her energy in another direction.

“Baking was always a stress reliever for me, so I started baking as a way to cope, both professionally and personally,” she said.

As Connor started sharing her baked goods on social media, people reached out to her to place orders. And the orders kept coming. By July 2020, after just a few months of baking, her hobby had turned into a true side business and a solid source of income.
