UGA SBDC Teamwork Aids Lula Business Owner in Two Major Ventures

Bill Turk created his business and patented technology – thermal acoustical pest control insulation (TAP®) – because of opportunities unique to Georgia, including his work with the Gainesville office of the University of Georgia Small Business Development Center (UGA SBDC).

Turk launched his transformative, multi-million-dollar pest control and insulation distribution business – Pest Control Insulation, LLC – in the 100-year-old shed behind his home in Homer, Georgia, eventually moving it to Lula in 2012. He started out as a poultry farmer in Banks County. As a volunteer for the Chestatee Chattahoochee Resource Conservation and Development Council (RC&D), he eventually found himself running a paper recycling plant that developed animal bedding made from wastepaper for poultry houses.

“The RC&D was providing grants to help entities that could divert paper waste from landfills,” he said. “However, the plant required repairs and upgrades so steep that the RC&D asked me to help sell it.”

LEGISLATIVE UPDATE

Week of January 10, 2025

Snow descends on Atlanta, with Georgia in a state of emergency days before legislators are set to gavel in for the 2025 session. This 2 year biennium will culminate with statewide elections in 2026. Attorney General Chris Carr has already announced his candidacy for Governor, with other politicians like Senator Bill Cowser waiting until after this session to make a decision.

21 freshman legislators will join the General Assembly in 2025. One race remains up in the air however, as Representative Mack Jackson's 48 vote victory is being contested in the courts. His opponent Tracy Wheeler hopes that unclear district boundaries lead to a special election.

This Accessible & Affordable MBA Boosts Soft Skills & Sharpens Your Professional Edge

October 16, 2024 by Julia Roberts

This focus on interpersonal skills is perfectly aligned with the core approach of the WebMBA, a program tailored to strengthen the essential abilities that modern businesses require.

How do you distinguish yourself from other candidates in today's high demand, fast paced workforce? New research suggests understanding what employers value most may be the key to landing that coveted role. A recent survey of business leaders highlighted the importance of soft skills as a top priority for hiring managers. The Business Journals conducted the survey this August, querying employers from a range of sectors, including Professional Services, Real Estate, and Entertainment.
