Electronic Medical Records company sees significant growth after working with the UGA SBDC

After the pandemic nearly closed ShareableFORMS, an electronic medical records company in Bremen, founder Bobby Mehan took this as an opportunity to revamp and rebuild the company. He started by hiring a new chief executive officer, Holly O'Hare, a registered nurse and former ShareableFORMS customer. Once on the job, O'Hare connected with the University of Georgia Small Business Development Center (UGA SBDC) to work through several projects.

Troy Vollenweider, area director at the UGA SBDC at the University of West Georgia, worked with O'Hare to reconfigure the company's organizational chart, redefine its job descriptions and roles, revamp the sales team and evaluate the product pricing. Since then, the business has come back from almost closing to seeing significant growth with a 137% increase in operating income from 2022-2023.

"We are a specialized electronic health care documentation system for surgery centers, independent practitioners and the office-based surgery space," said O'Hare. "We fill in that niche where paper is still heavily present but gets lost in transit."
